Chapter 1

Judas the Galilean and the Fourth Philosophy: The Erased Threat to the Monetary World Order

> "No one can serve two masters… You cannot serve both God and Mammon."
> — Words attributed to "Jesus" but lived by Judas the Galilean and his brother James the Just.

1.1 The Fourth Philosophy: A Spiritual Rebellion Against Money Itself

In the decades before the so-called "birth of Christ," a dangerous and uncompromising movement erupted out of Galilee and Qumran. It wasn't violent in the conventional sense, yet it threatened the most sacred idol of Rome: money.

Founded by Judas the Galilean and his brother James the Just, this movement—known by Josephus as the Fourth Philosophy—was not merely political or religious. It was philosophical, economic, and metaphysically revolutionary. Judas and James taught:

- Total rejection of tribute and taxation to Rome.
- Absolute loyalty to the sovereignty of the source/creator of souls over any created god, state or emperor.
- Rejection of hierarchical power—governments both Roman and priestly.
- A lifestyle rooted in moneyless communal ownership, sacred fasting, radical equality, and Pythagorean discipline.

Their movement had deep roots in the Essene purity tradition at Qumran, and it shared many parallels with Pythagorean monasticism: celibacy, fasting, mathematical cosmology, and resistance to temporal corruption. Yet it was sharper than Pythagoreanism in one crucial way:

It directly opposed money as a metaphysical deception—the medium through which Rome, the Temple, Yaldabaoth (El Elyon/YHWH) and Belial himself ruled.

1.2 Judas and James: True Founders of the Messianic Resistance

Unlike the fictionalized “Jesus Christ,” Judas and James were real, named revolutionaries whose threat was so potent that Josephus—writing under Roman patronage—was forced to name them while strategically minimizing their significance.

James the Just, called “the Righteous One,” was known even by later Christian sources as a pillar of the community and a sworn Nazirite/Nazorene, yet his role as co-founder of the anti-money Fourth Philosophy has been systematically erased.

These two brothers taught that the nameless/genderless creator of our souls and money were mutually exclusive, and that to pay tribute to Caesar was to serve the Beast.

The church later stole James’ identity and split it among multiple invented figures:

- James, “son of Alphaeus”
- James the “Less”
- James the “brother of the Lord”

But none of these were allowed to hold the power James truly had—as founder of the first anti-Roman, anti-monetary sect of spiritual anarchists.

James (Ya’akov) may have also been the first martyr of the church of Jerusalem. Paul’s illegally obtained Sanhedrin, and the subsequent assassination of James, is thought by many at this level of scrutiny to be hidden under the fraudulent pseudonym “Stephen” in Acts chapter 7. It’s likely no mistake that Stephen translates to the "crowned one”.
